Britain to pull out troops from Afghan imbroglio

LONDON: - More than 100,000 troops belonging to the occupying Anglo-American coalition in Iraq may be withdrawn by next April, according to a secret British government memo.

The memo, leaked to a Sunday newspaper, was signed by Britain's Defence Secretary John Reid and the plans troop withdrawal drawn up by the ministry of defence's (MOD) policy director Martin Howard.

Commentators said the leaked plans and the leaked memo were hugely significant four days after London was hit by multiple bomb blasts by suspected al-Qaida supporters.

But an MOD spokeswoman denied any decision had been made and insisted the UK had "always said that it is our intention to hand over the lead in fighting terrorists to the Iraqi security forces as their capability increases."
